Ca. 1817, 1840, 1855

This home was built in 3 sections. The two story simple farmhouse was built by an unknown settler in 1817 in Erie, Alabama, which was situated on the banks of the Black Warrior River. When the town was wiped out by yellow fever in the early 1800's it was moved to its present site. In 1840 Attoway Davis, a wealthy planter, bought the lot and house and added two rooms and a porch in front of the farmhouse. In 1855, a doctor purchased the property and built a one room cottage on the east side of the house to serve as his office. The house was bought and restored by Ralph and Diana Liverman. It will operate as a Bed and Breakfast.

Ca. 1895

This Victorian home has the date 1895, incorporated in the gingerbread scroll work in the façade. The home was built in the same design style as the home on the opposite corner as they were owned by the same family. Both homes are now owned by Michael Turner and Larry Sexton who have completed restoration on the first home and are now restoring this home. This home is being restored to include a more open floor plan and period architectural details. Michael and Larry are known for their restoration, design and decorating skills. This restoration will be complete in time for the tour of homes.

Ca. 1840

Boligee (Indian word for Splashing Water) Hill, located on a high hill, overlooking lovely views in every direction was built by Dr. John David Means in 1840. The house has a basement floor and two stories, four large rooms on each floor, wide hall extending the length of the house on the first floor, with wide double doors, back and front. There is a large portico with fluted columns, wide staircase on the front and a wide gallery on the back. In 1869 the home was purchased by Cornelia Hays who planted sweet myrtles and renamed the home Myrtle Hall. The home has been lovingly restored by Chris (Chip) and Teresa Beeker.

Thornhill, is a classic 6 Ionic-Column Greek Revival house. It was built for James Innes Thornton (Alabama's third Secretary of State). The plantation schoolhouse was built in 1845 and still remains. The family cemetery, 175 yards east of the house, has Thornton, his wife, 4 of 11 children, and 3 grandchildren buried there. Thornhill, originally 2600 acres, now 1600 acres, is owned by Brock Jones of Tuscaloosa, the fourth great grandson of James Innes Thornton. Thornhill sits atop a great hill providing a view that is breathtaking. One can see miles in every direction.
